CLAY has always been my preferred medium in artistic expression for over 35 years, although I enjoy painting as well.

Each piece is individually handmade and one of a kind. Colour variances and mistakes are left as they were part of the process.

Although clay is relatively valueless in its raw state, it can be transformed by pushing scraping paddling into almost any imaginable shape and then decorated with designs and glaze. Fired in a kiln turning it into stone.

Art is a universal language and through imagery that is understood and recognized by all everywhere. What is important is the pleasure each piece of art can bring into someone's life, whatever form.

Through the miracle of the hand heart and soul you literally make something out of nothing.

Each piece of art fulfills its greatest purpose when it enhances a person's life, or finds its home in someone's heart.
